

BUCKLES

Paddling to Winter

Love, life and negotiation on the Voyageur's Highway

On May 1, 1999, reporter Julie Buckles and her newly wedded husband Charly Ray paddled away in their handmade red canvas and wood canoe for a backwoods adventure. They paddled 1,700 miles from Lake Superior following the historic Voyageur's Highway to Wollaston Lake in northern Saskatchewan, where they wintered over on a remote island.

“Part adventure yarn and marriage manual...this book is sure to appeal to paddlers, of course, but just as sure to appeal to anyone who has ever had trouble understanding the vows of matrimony.”
– Peter Guy, THE LIGHTHOUSE ROAD

“A wonderful read for anyone who has ever dreamed of walking out the door to embark on an adventure of such magnitude that the idea of returning is a matter of faith. With vivid prose and a forthright voice that doesn't shy from human fallibility, Buckles tells the story of a journey as stunning as it is dangerous.”
– Danielle Sosin THE LONG-SHINING WATERS
